

What's Notable About CHES?

Why hundreds of families have taken part in CHES since 2001

Many homeschooling families in the area have discovered that they can energize their home education by connecting with the opportunities CHES provides. Here are some of the distinctive benefits of our group.

Courses that equip

CHES provides middle school courses to help prepare students for high school-level work, foundational high school courses in hard to teach subjects like foreign language and science, and college-level content courses at the high school pace. Our courses teach students to think, reason, and communicate. (Read more on our website: <http://chessclasses.org>.)

A personal environment

Classes at CHES are small groups usually having between five and twelve students (the average size is nine). Students are encouraged to discuss the topics with their teachers and fellow students, contributing their thoughts, not just turning in homework. Students learn time management skills, accountability, and grow personally as they adapt to different teachers' styles and interact with their peers. Plus, they have fun learning together and working in groups in a challenging learning environment.

Expert instructors

The teachers at CHES are what make us truly exceptional. Our teachers are Christians who truly care about their students. They include public and private school teachers, tutors and private educators, and veteran homeschooling parents—all with years of educating experience. Many of our teachers hold degrees and/or have careers or professional accomplishments in the fields in which they teach - all share a passion for the subjects they have chosen to teach and for working within the homeschooling community. Flexible education plans

At CHES, students register for individual classes, not an entire program, which means families can tailor their education plan to their homeschool. Most families simply choose to supplement their homeschool with between one and four courses at CHES, meaning the program is more adaptable to each family's unique needs.

Advanced-level and honors course options

While homeschoolers know the advantages of learning at home, public institutions look for ways to compare home educated students with those in public and private schools. When a student takes the most challenging courses available to them, it can validate the student's transcript for colleges. Showing that someone else has assessed your student's work is helpful. If your student excels in a particular area and is ready to delve deeper or is ready for more challenging work, consider the honors- and advanced-level courses CHES has to offer.

Note: An honors course indicates that the class will have a greater quantity of work throughout the academic year compared to a standard high school course. When incorporating honors courses into your student's high school transcript, grades can be weighted when calculating the GPA. Advanced-level courses will help prepare the students to take the College Board Advanced Placement (AP) exam for that designated subject area. Students who pass the AP exam may earn college credit.

An experience community college can't give

What are the CHES advantages over dual enrollment? CHES provides small class sizes where the teacher is more able to connect and interact with the students, and students can learn in an environment where biblical values are honored. The focus of the class is to master the material, rather than just pass a test. Students have the entire academic year to study, instead of a 16-week semester, and will learn among peers who are equally talented and motivated. Focused study helps students discern their interests and passions (and college majors).

Affordable tuition

Private schools in the NOVA area charge tuition fees of approximately $11,000 to $37,000 per year. At CHES, students can take a full 6-class credit load for around $2,580—around one-third the cost! CHES maintains competitive rates with similar enrichment groups in the area. Plus, CHES offers special volunteer-track pricing and need-based scholarships.
